FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

Coverage of Cuba

FBIS coverage of Cuba continues at a high level. []
Bureau monitors some 3 hours of Havana domestic news and commentary broadcasts daily and can provide full 24-hour coverage of Havana's programs to its home audience as required. The Havana domestic television service is also monitored [] an average of 3.5 hours daily. A number of Cuban regional radios are also monitorable, but normally not covered because the content is not of sufficient interest;
these would be productive monitoring targets in a crisis. []

Until late December 1981 [] was also monitoring a daily Havana English-language broadcast to North America. This program, which was transmitted on the standard AM broadcast band, went off the air 24 December, at a time when other changes in the Cuban broadcast pattern
were noted. []

In addition to radio, television, and press agency coverage, 38 Cuban publications are also received at FBIS Headquarters which provide some reports on assistance to Caribbean and Central American leftist groups. The Caribbean News Agency (CANA), also monitored [] yields information on Cuban activities in the Caribbean region. []

Computer Glossary

The FBIS Production Group has produced a second reference glossary using the MAT ("Machine Assisted Translation") computer system. This publication is a Russian-English computer glossary with current terms of interest to general translators and others specializing in the computer field, providing definitions for frequency used computer terms in the Russian language. The first MAT-produced glossary dealt with Chinese agricultural terms. These issuances are available to the public through the National Technical Information Service as a "Reference Aid."

Field Reporting

Recently compiled statistics indicate that 71.6% of material filed by FBIS field bureaus to Headquarters in FY 81 was published in the Daily Reports. Portions of the remaining copy were distributed on the Wire Service, were available to analysts through "interim SAFE," or were passed to consumers through direct distribution. All material filed by field bureaus went laterally to those overseas consumers who had a validated requirement. In addition, the Joint Publications Research Service (JPRS) published 19,500 pages in 274 publications in FY 81.
